A FATAL SHOT.

The Barroom at the Central Hotel the Scene of a Tragic Affray.

Young Henry Newell Killed by John Thomas—Particulars of the Affair.

Henry L. Newell, Jr., was shot and almost instantly killed by John Thomas at the Central Hotel last night.

An insult offered, the crack of the pistol followed—several times in quick succession—and one of the participants in the affray staggered and fell, shot through the heart.

Thomas is one of the bar-tenders at the hotel, and was on duty last night. About half-past ten o'clock Newell entered the bar-room. He had been drinking during the evening and was considerably intoxicated. Wes. Alexander, the colored barber, was with him. Ferd Hechinger, Robert Caldwell and one or two others were also in the room at the time. A couple of glasses of whiskey and glass of Blue Lick were ordered. Thomas at first refused to let Newell have the liquor, but it was finally set out, according to Alexander's story. Newell handed him a nickel. Thomas told him the bill amounted to a quarter. Some words passed between them, Newell at last making some insulting remark about Thomas' wife. The shooting followed. The second ball fired pierced Newell's left breast. With an exclamation, "Oh! I'm shot!" he turned and staggered out through the office, and into the hall at the ladies' entrance where he fell and expired almost instantly. In all, four or five shots were fired. Only one took effect. Such are the particulars of the shooting as told by Alexander.

The body was afterwards removed to Mellvain, Humphreys & Bramel's undertaking establishment where a post mortem was held by Drs. Owens and Phillips. The ball, a thirty-eight calibre, entered between the third and fourth rib, cut through the upper portion of the heart, and ranging downward passed out between the seventh and eighth ribs at the back.

Thomas was lodged in jail. He is about twenty-three years old, is a son of the late Greenberry Thomas and has a wife and one child.

Newell was a son of ex-Mayor Henry L. Newell, and was about the same age as Thomas.

An inquest was held by Squire Viceroy at 10 o'clock. It was developed that Newell and Hechinger entered the bar-room and some liquor was ordered. Thomas set out a glass of beer for Hechinger, but refused to let Newell have any. Some words passed between them, Newell at last making a remark about Thomas' wife. Just what it was the witnesses did not hear.

The shooting followed. Thomas emptied one pistol at Newell, firing rapidly from behind the counter. Then taking another pistol he stepped around and shot once or twice more. Newell staggered out and fell in the hallway, where he expired almost instantly.

The examining trial will be held Monday morning before Judge Coons.
